

By GAUTAMAN BHASKARAN

India need not hunger for food, yet it does!

India is still hungry 63 years after it was freed from British colonial yoke. The Global Hunger Index places India at a poor 65 in the list with even China, though far more populous than its Asian neighbor, doing much better. While China has brought down the number of its hungry people by 58 million during the past decade, shockingly India's number has risen by 30 million since the mid-1990s.

Although India's hunger is no longer related to food famines and shortages — which plagued the country before Independence with the last major famine having taken place in 1943 — yet 240 million citizens (out of the total billion plus) or 21 percent of the population goes hungry to bed night after night. Ironically, India produces enough food, and more, to feed its millions, but does not generate enough employment opportunities for them to afford that food. Even basic food, such as rice, wheat and lentils, remains beyond their means. Instances of severe and endemic hunger and even starvation are, therefore, not exactly rare.

Some experts aver that India's situation is much worse than that in sub-Saharan Africa, and, of course, in China, where only nine percent of the population remain hungry. In absolute terms, this works out to 117 million people. The reason here is simple: not enough food is being produced for the population, which is quite unlike the case in India.

India, on the other hand, while producing enough food, is terribly callous about storage, wastage, distribution and, finally, mass affordability. A recent government report had this to say: About 20 million tons of wheat, rice and lentils, the equivalent of Canada's annual wheat crop, is eaten by rats and birds or spoilt, because of improper storage and warehouse facilities. A whole lot of grains is stored in the open.

Lopsided government schemes and misplaced priorities have led to perennial neglect of the nation's villages, where closer to 65 percent of the population still lives. A large number of villagers are illiterate and know little else than farming or related activities. These men and women have been displaced by industrialization, and have hence been left without enough income. Obviously, with many farmers unable to step into an industrial regime, the picture could not but get bleaker. Hunger exists not because there is not enough food in India, but because people cannot access it.

What is even worse is children going hungry: when they do — and a staggering 47 percent of them under six are horribly malnourished — their overall development takes a hit. They cannot concentrate at school, and are very likely to be caught in a trap of poor education, underemployment and poverty. The poverty-hunger chain remains unbroken. Rather, it gets strengthened. Thus, India's much-touted human capital remains underutilized. Income distribution worsens, leading to disastrous consequences. One of them is mass suicides by farmers, the most important segment of the rural population.

About 200,000 farmers have ended their lives since 1997, indicating the most tragic symptom of poverty and hunger. Driven by debilitating debts, and facing starvation, the farmers have little option but to kill themselves. Debt reflects negative economy. Two factors have pushed Indian agriculture from green to red: rising costs of production and falling prices of farm produce. Both have resulted from trade liberalization and corporate globalization. For example, in 1998, India was forced to open up its seed sector to global corporations, which changed the input economy. Farm saved seeds were replaced by corporate seeds, which need fertilizers and pesticides. And these cannot be saved.

Currently, the Indian government provides rice and wheat at subsidized prices to 316 million people, the poorest of the poor, through a public distribution system. However, the scheme is flawed on many counts: food grains do not always reach the needy, because they are sold to middlemen by unscrupulous traders. Otherwise, why would India be still so hungry? Let me give one more concrete example. Punjab, a northern Indian state, is termed the best on India's hunger index. Yet, the state ranks below Gabon, Honduras and Vietnam in the Global Hunger Index.

Any move to stamp out hunger must look beyond merely providing food stamps and

POSTED BY

GAUTAMAN BHASKARAN
Nov 17, 2010 22:24

PRINT | EMAIL | SHARE

- DELICIOUS
- DIGG
- FACEBOOK
- GOOGLE
- YAHOO! BUZZ

COMMENTS

Post a comment
Read all comments \(0\)

BLOGS

MORE COLUMNS NEWS

- Another Baghdad massacre: Iraqi Christians are already at home
- Justice, Israeli style
- Is peace on sale in Bhopal?
- Analysis: Karzai remarks risk US-Afghan rift
- Iraq after the elections
- What do you think?
- Social estrangement
- Whose India is it anyway?

LATEST COMMENTS

Extremists represent no one but themselves: King
As long as Muslim extremist exists, so will Biblical Christianity and Biblical Christians, to o
Richard Drake at Nov 18, 2010 05:21
1 comments

18 hurt in Pakistan mosque shootout over argument
Mosque is a mosque for the people of worship for the people of background and faith - What kind of peo

NEWSLETTER

Yes, I would like to receive daily news updates from Arab News in my mailbox.

public distribution. The root cause of hunger is unemployment, and unless sufficient opportunities are generated, India cannot progress toward a hunger-free society. In India's case, a lot more attention needs to be given to villages. This would mean better infrastructure that would facilitate greater economic activity. Also, improved medical care in rural regions would not only ensure better health for the inhabitants but also encourage reverse migration from cities, which are "living hells" to quote Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

— Gautaman Bhaskaran is an Indian author and journalist. He can be contacted at gautamanbhaskaran@yahoo.in

World Vision India WorldVision.in/Sponsor+Now
 Help Neglected Children Lead a Normal Life.
 Join Our Mission!

One of Eleven Children www.oneofeleven.com
 A memoir about finding your own way Supports poor children in the U.S.

Tamil Entertainment www.cini.in Free moive stills,gallery,images Tamil Movie
 Reviews

Ads by Google

Comments

0 COMMENTS | READ ALL | 0 COMMENTS | POST YOUR COMMENT | READ ALL

POST YOUR COMMENT

NAME:

required

EMAIL:

required (email will never be displayed)

COMMENT

SECURITY CHECK

Please enter the following characters in the box provided (case sensitive). This helps us prevent automated programs from creating accounts and sending spam.

All comments are subject to approval
Terms and conditions

World Vision India
 Help Neglected Children Lead a Normal Life.
 Join Our Mission!

One of Eleven Children
 A memoir about finding your own way
 Supports poor children in the U.S.

Ads by Google

Saleem Shah at Nov 18, 2010
 05:21

2 comments

Protesters in Spain seek end to Western Sahara crackdown

it amazing that spain host such event when spanish gov wont even allow talks about it s presenc

brahim fadil at Nov 18, 2010
 05:20

1 comments

Iraqi president says no to Tariq Aziz death order saddam death sentences carried out by same government and full support from US and their allies

mohammed at Nov 18, 2010
 05:20

1 comments

Southerners fear reprisals in Khartoum, plan exodus

Each disease has its own pill. So the two disputes have their own solutions. Leave South Sudan

Monyejur at Nov 18, 2010
 05:20

3 comments

Hold fast to noble values of Islam: Al-Sudais

It is simply laughable how much lying nonsense some people post in response to a person telling

Miranda at Nov 18, 2010 05:20

7 comments